Mark Evans at 9:30 A.M. over WTOP-TV (Washington):
INTERVIEWS MRS. ALLEN DULLES

MARK EVANS AND HIS TWO GUESTS, MRS. DAVID FINLEY AND MRS. ALLEN DULLES, WERE SEEN SEATED IN A LIVING ROOM SETTING.

EVANS: "One of the nice things that happens during the Christmas season is such a thing as will take place on the 27th of December at Warner Brothers Cinerama Theater, where they're going to have for Hungarian relief the showing of 'Seven Wonders of the World.' And Mrs. Finley, Mrs. David Finley, how's the head man of the house?"

MRS. FINLEY: "Well, he's fine, working just as hard as ever, it seems to me."

EVANS: "I had understood he was retiring, but that's his way of retiring."

MRS. FINLEY: "That's his way of retiring, yes."

EVANS: "Mrs. Allen Dulles, who certainly needs no introduction with the famous husband she has, we're happy to meet her in person. She's the one lady, I think, who can't ask her husband what happened at the office today."

MRS. DULLES: "Well, that's true, but you'd be surprised how many things do happen that take one into the network."

EVANS: "I'll bet. I imagine to be married to the head of the CIA is probably a unique job in all the world."

MRS. DULLES: "You never get told anything, but things you have to know around you."

EVANS: "Yeah, I can well imagine. I think it's nice of you ladies to come up here today to talk about this wonderful project for Hungarian relief. We're all pretty much moved by it. The Red Cross is in back of this, I know."

MRS. FINLEY: "Yes, they certainly are, and it's nice of you to have us here to tell everyone--"

EVANS: "How is the drive going?"

MRS. FINLEY: "Well, the drive is going pretty well but not as well as we would like. We've got almost half of what we need in this area."

EVANS: "Now, the entire proceeds from Cinerama on the 22nd go--"

MRS. FINLEY: "Oh, the entire proceeds, they've given us everything--"

EVANS: "That's wonderful."

MRS. FINLEY: "They're printing programs, and invitations and everything; we have no expense whatsoever."

EVANS: "It's appropriate that it should be around the world, because Hungary is about a halfway stop."

EVANS: "Have you ever been to Hungary, Mrs. Dulles?"

MRS. DULLES: "Yes, I have in the good old days when everything was happy and lovely."

EVANS: "Budapest was one of the really delightful cities of the world, wasn't it?"

MRS. DULLES: "Yes, yes."

EVANS: "Far from what it is today."

MRS. DULLES: "Yes. I have a daughter living in Frankfurt who motored down there with some other young married women to take warm clothes to the refugees. She said, 'Mother, you know what refugees are like, refugees are just like everybody else--' "

EVANS: "Without a home, huh?"

MRS. DULLES: "--and that makes us realize that if we had to flee, and were in terror and sorrow, how much it would mean if somebody was doing something for us and thinking about us."

EVANS: "Well, it's such a helpless feeling, I get it, I'm sure you do too."

MRS. DULLES: "Yes."

(Mrs. Finley explained some of the uses to which the money is put.)

EVANS: "I think it's worthy of note too that anything you spend on this would be deductible from income tax. It's about this time of the year, too."

MRS. DULLES: "We hope they'll spend that much so that they'll care about what's being done."

EVANS: "It will be money well spent. You just returned from an around-the-world trip, I understand, or at least this summer, you did."

MRS. DULLES: "Yes, we did go around the world."

EVANS: "Yes, we did too, it's a big world, isn't it?"

MRS. DULLES: "Yes, if we could only draw the people together by everyone helping others."

EVANS: "There's no better magnet in all the world than people helping people. Thank you both very much, Mrs. Dulles and Mrs. Finley."
